

3 Days OL Pejeta Conservancy

At a Glance:

This safari is only designated to cover only Ol pejeta Conservancy with East Africa's largest black rhino where is a must to see Northern White Rhinos and Chimpanzees. You shall experience philosophical innovative, tangible, sustainable conservation for wildlife and people in this Africa's renowned conservancy.

Back from the Brink;

The southern white rhino (Ceratotherium simum) is listed as near threatened by the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN). According to the IUCN, this subspecies was on the brink of extinction by the end of the 19th century – having been reduced to just one small population of approximately 20-50 animals in South Africa. However, in one of the most successful collective conservation efforts of the century, there are now thriving populations in east and southern Africa – totalling over 20,000 animals. Ol Pejeta conservancy has 30 southern whites. There is actually no colour difference between white and black rhino. The name is said to have been a mistranslation of the Afrikaans word 'weit' meaning 'wide' – which refers to their square shaped lips used for grazing. This is the main distinction between white rhino and black, which have a hooked lip for browsing. The southern white rhino is said to have the most complex social structure of all rhino subspecies (a group of rhinos is called a crash!) and prefer open grass plains making them easier to spot on safari.
